Our school programs

- Making Middle Grades Work (MMGW) is designed for students between the ages of 11 and 16.

Too many students leave the middle grades unprepared to succeed in rigorous high school studies and unable to take advantage of all high school can offer. By ninth grade, many struggling students have fallen behind and are on a path to become high school dropouts.

Through SREB's middle grades initiative, SREB states are among the first in the nation to implement strategies that address the crucial middle grades and key transition into high school. Making Middle Grades Work (MMGW) helps states, districts and schools look at what they expect, what they teach and how they teach young adolescents to prepare for success in further education.

Our school, in partnership with MMGW, is committed to improving school and classroom practices in the middle grades by implementing a framework of Key Practices and conditions for continuous improvement. The MMGW brochure, Making Middle Grades Work: An Enhanced Design to Prepare All

Middle Grades Students for Success in High School, details the essential elements and other components of the framework.

- RAM Tough Book Clubs – R(eading) A(nd) M(eeting) – Clubs are small voluntary book clubs held during lunch. Teachers facilitate small groups of students who choose to meet and discuss a particular book while they eat lunch.
- Food for Thought – Students who demonstrate they are exemplary readers and writers are invited to a quarterly lunch in the media center. The focus of these luncheons varies. Local authors may describe their writing process, the media specialist might book-talk great new books or students might design book promotion tools to air on Rucker AM. Other reading incentives include Clemson/Carolina reading program and the SCJBA voting party.
